

Four Corners Immigrant Resource Center

October 22, 2013

To the potential new member and leader of the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship of Durango.

My name is Nicole Mosher and I am the Executive Director of Compañeros: Four Corners Immigrant Resource Center also located in Durango, Colorado. I have worked in this position since 2010 and had my first contact with the UUFD in mid 2011. The Chair of the social justice committee became a friend of mine and then an active board treasurer, as well as a community liaison for Compañeros. She invited me to present the work of Compañeros and our mission, which is to support immigrants and their loved ones through education, advocacy and integrative programs. In 2012, generous donations poured in each month because we were chosen as the recipient of the Share the Plate program. Compañeros is proud to collaborate with the lovely people at the local UU fellowship and knows that not only do they give their heart, money and time to the immigrant families we serve but also to many other groups and individuals in need. But you already know how cool Unitarians are because you are one yourself. What can I say...

If you love what you do and enjoy living in a wonderful social and natural environment, this community is where you want to be. People of the UUFD are so fun and generous, thoughtful and responsible, and they are the kind of folks you look forward to seeing every Sunday. And because our community is fairly small, you'll have the pleasure of knowing each other in other contexts, like bumping into each other at the local coffee shop or hiking on one of the many local trails, meeting at a dinner party a mutual friend invited you to, even waiting in traffic for the train to go by, you might glance over at the car next to you and see a friendly face from the fellowship. Southwest Colorado is an amazing place to love, live and work so I hope you will consider becoming a part of our community through this opportunity to minister here.

Sincerely,

Nicole Mosher, Executive Director
